James S. Hutchins

Born in Rumford, Me., March 17th, 1864. Died in Bethel, Me., Feb. 26th, 1928.

The people of Bethel and vicinity are mourning the death of one of its public spirited citizens, a man always deeply interested in the welfare of the community and one who was universally liked and respected.

On Sunday afternoon Mr. Hutchins left home to go for a walk and was seen by friends on the Lockes Mills road and a little later was met by others on lower Main street, wending his way up town, seemingly as usual.

As evening drew near his non-appearance caused alarm and members of the family started in search of him, going directly to the store where upon entering they discovered his lifeless body on the floor.

Mr. Hutchins was the son of Joel and Frances Silver Hutchins and was born in Rumford, Me., 64 years ago.

After he finished attending school he became well known as a successful teacher and there are many who will remember his untiring efforts for the good of his pupils in his native town, also in Wilton and Bethel.

It was while employed in Bethel that he met and married Miss Vertie Cushman of South Bethel making farming his business. When the first R. F. D. route was established in Bethel he became the carrier, which position he held for many years.

Some years ago he moved to Bethel Village and for a long time kept a grocery store on Church street and on giving up this business he had employment with P. J. Tyler for a time. About four years ago he accepted a position as manager of the A. and P. store where he has been very popular.

His never failing courtesy to each and all, the friendly smile to the child, standing on tip-toe in order to reach its packages, the ready hand extended so quickly to help some one feeble or weak, the words of real sympathy spoken to those in trouble and the countless helpful deeds done for humanity's sake, forgotten by him as soon as done, but to all those who so sadly regret his passing on, they will ever remain as mountain peaks of memory.

Mr. Hutchins was a member of the Universalist church and active in all work connected with it. A prominent member of the I. O. O. F. he was very loyal to its precepts.

He is survived by his widow, Mrs. Vivian Hutchins now in Kansas City, two daughters, Dorothy, who was employed in the store with her father, and Marion, who also lives at home, three grandchildren, two of whom he had cared for in his home since the death of their parents some years ago. There is also one sister, Mrs. Mary Hutchins of Bethel, and to her he was a most devoted brother. Besides these there are several nieces and nephews.

But none to him of our treasures. He had not from him to weep. For to him there came the assurance He would be loved once sleep.

Yet beyond in Heaven's fair valleys He dwells still, and there he waits. With the fairest on earth completed God dwells all things for the best.

And for all of us his kinship A reward and well earned reprieve When the pass through Heaven's gate was.

And I am sure he loved once sleep.

Funeral services will be held at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Kelley Plandee, Washington, D. C., on Saturday, March 10th, at 10 o'clock in the afternoon. The services will be held at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Kelley Plandee, Washington, D. C., on Saturday, March 10th, at 10 o'clock in the afternoon.

"LISTEN LADIES"

The laughable comedy "Listen Ladies," presented in Garland Chapel, on Tuesday evening of last week, by the Ladies' Club of the Congregational Parish was a success in every way, and was thoroughly enjoyed by an audience that taxed the capacity of the chapel auditorium.

To outline any part, when all the parts were so well assigned and so admirably interpreted, would be wholly out of place, but special mention should be made of the clever work of Miss Littlefield, who substituted for Mrs. Russell on a few hours notice.

The clever bits upon the men were much enjoyed, especially by the men themselves, with the loving of the cow and the cooking of real honest to goodness beans gave an effect of realism not often produced upon the local stage. Excellent music by Herrick's orchestra, and a vocal duet by Messrs. Brainerd and Ayer added much to the evening's pleasure.

At the close of the evening's program a challenge was thrown down to the men of the Parish. Will they pick it up? It is reported that they have already met to accept the challenge. "Listen Ladies," and others like this are about to be something new.

NEWS REVIEW OF CURRENT EVENTS

Triumph of Hughes in Pan-American Conference—Klan Drops Mask.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

CHARLES EVANS HUGHES and his fellow delegates to the Pan-American conference have returned from Havana covered with glory, for they—and especially Mr. Hughes—obtained from the gathering practically everything that their government wanted, and the troublesome question of American intervention was postponed for five years with small chances that it will then be revived in the form it took at Havana. Probably the most beneficial result attained was the removal of misunderstanding among American countries. Just before the conference closed Mr. Hughes by a brilliant speech brought into line with the United States all the delegates except Doctor Pueyrredon of Argentina, who had been forced to resign, and Gustavo Guerrero of Salvador, who utterly lost his fight against intervention.

The accomplishments of the conference include:

- Establishment of the principle of compulsory arbitration for the settlement of inter-American disputes, except those pertaining to the sovereignty and independence of nations in purely domestic problems.
- A Pan-American union convention, placing that body on a permanent basis and permitting the members to have special representatives on the governing board instead of diplomats regularly accredited to Washington.
- A treaty on the rights and duties of neutrals in event of war.
- A commercial aviation convention open to the signature of all countries.
- A treaty placing aliens abroad on the same footing as nationals.
- A treaty establishing the right of asylum, to which the United States entered formal reservation.
- A treaty providing for international cooperation for the suppression and prevention of revolutions in each other's territories.
- Adoption of a Pan-American sanitary code.
- A convention on maritime neutrality, the United States entering a reservation to the clause forbidding the arming of merchantmen for defense in time of war.
- A code of private international law dealing with the judicial status of persons, marriage and divorce. The United States declined to participate on constitutional grounds.

SUBMITTED to determined attacks, direct and indirect, to cause to collapse, the Ku Klux Klan has dropped its mask and changed its name. An edict issued by William W. Evans of Atlanta, Imperial Wizard, read:

"After midnight February 22 it will be unlawful for any Klansman to wear any mask or robe as part of his regalia, and any Klansman who shall be unavailably absent from the meeting to be held February 22 shall as soon thereafter as possible attend a regular meeting and there become a member of the Knights of the Great Forest."

Simultaneous ceremonies were held in every "clan" and it was impressed on the members that the order hereafter has no political and social aims, and that it will suffer punishment.

Attorney General Arthur Gilliam of Indiana asserted that he would proceed with his suit to have the Klan declared bankrupt and to have its officials restrained from further activities in that state.

SENATOR JIM HENRY of Missouri in his pre-conference speech, Monday, is living up to expectations in that he is seeking to minimize or suppress altogether the issue of prohibition. His slogan is "Turn the records out," and he proposes to keep the federal power within constitutional limits, to abolish government by boards and bureaus, to equalize the burdens of taxation, to repeal all laws creating special privileges, and to eliminate the "vast army of spies, snipers, and informers."

It is generally agreed that efforts to suppress prohibition as an issue will fail, perhaps in both the Democratic and the Republican conventions. The leaders of dry organizations were preparing for a conference February 28 at which plans were to be laid to force both parties to include dry planks in their platforms, and the wet will be correspondingly deterred, especially the Democratic supporters of Al Smith, who has made his position fairly clear. There is even some talk of again putting forward William Gibbs McAdoo as a dry Democratic candidate, despite his renunciation of that ambition. Anti-Smith activity in the South seemed to be increasing, despite the fact that Mayor Jimmy Walker of New York was down there admittedly fostering sentiment in favor of the governor. In the Northwest Smith was gaining many friends, especially after winning in the South Dakota caucuses.

Old primaries are a matter of prime interest to the Republican leaders, and there, too, the prohibition question raises its head in the contest between Hoover and Willis. The state Anti-Saloon league seemed to be in a quandary, since it has always heretofore endorsed Willis and yet probably does not wish to be put in the position of endorsing Hoover as a wet. The Mississippi valley Southern states were deeply interested in the stand Hoover would take before the senate committee considering food control legislation.

Replying to the Borah quiz, Mr. Hoover in rather platitudinous phrases declares himself a dry and calls the Eighteenth amendment a "great social and economic experiment."

The gossip in Washington was that Secretary of the Treasury Mellon, Charles D. Miller and William M. Butler would form a "big three" combination that might dictate the selection of the Republican candidate. It is believed they will respectively control unaffiliated delegations from Pennsylvania, New York and Massachusetts, the total being 208 delegates, or nearly one-fifth of the number in the Kansas City convention.

UNLESS his appeal is successful, Harry P. Sinclair, the oil magnate, will have to spend six months in jail. Justice Sillons of the District of Columbia Supreme court found him and three associates guilty of criminal contempt, sustaining charges against them involving them in obstruction of justice by jury shadowing in the Teapot Dome conspiracy trial of last fall. Justice Sillons, besides giving Sinclair the jail term, sentenced Henry Mason Day to four months in jail, William J. Burns to 15 days in jail and W. Sherman Burns to pay a fine of $1,000.

Justice Bailey of the same court upheld the right of the senate to arrest Robert W. Stewart of the Standard Oil Company of Indiana for refusal to answer questions.

The senate oil committee, in its efforts to determine how much of the Continental Trading company's $3,000,000 profit found its way to the Republican national committee, questioned a number of bankers from various cities. The committee had already found that at least $750,000 of the Liberty bonds involved was used to pay off a note of the Republican party at the Empire Trust company in New York.

GREAT BRITAIN sprung a surprise at the opening session of the security commission of the League of Nations in Geneva. Lord Cuthbert, who succeeded Lord Cecil in the league, told the delegates that the British government would support the Finnish proposal calling for financial support for nations attacked without provocation, believing that to be one of the most practical ways to prevent war. Cuthbert also indicated "the application of the League treaties in other areas." In both instances this was a complete change of front by the British. Boris Stolin, the Russian observer, submitted the Soviet government's plan for disarming the world by striking navies, abolishing armies and destroying airplanes and munitions within a period of four years.

In place of the League of Nations the Soviets propose that all international relations shall be controlled by permanent commissions which would enforce their decisions through a special land and water police service, by "nonmilitary pressure." For internal protection each nation would be allowed a small police force carefully restricted as to armament. The Soviet plan is long and exhaustive and the security commission found it could not be dismissed without consideration.

LIEUTENANT COMMANDER DAYLISS of the destroyer Paulding and Lieutenant Commander R. K. Jones of the submarine S-4, the latter of whom lost his life in the collision of the two vessels, were held jointly responsible for the disaster by the naval court of inquiry. The court also found that Rear Admiral Frank M. Bruhny, commander of the control force, including all submarines on the Atlantic, had failed to contribute "the sound judgment and intelligent guidance expected from an officer of his experience" during the time he was in full charge of salvage operations. Therefore, it recommended that Admiral Bruhny be detached from command of the control force.

The court's principal findings provoked so much criticism that Secretary of the Navy Wilbur ordered the court reconvened for "the purpose of setting forth with completeness its reasons on which the opinions and recommendations as to the two commanding officers and Admiral Bruhny are based." Until the court's final report is submitted Secretary Wilbur will not take any action.

BERT HINKLER, Australian aviator, completed his solo flight from England to Australia in a light plane with folding wings, in 15 days. His expenses, including food, fuel and accommodations, were only $220, or about 2 cents a mile. Hinkler established two new records, and Robert Horn, former chancellor of the exchequer, declared his flight "outstanding Colonel Lindbergh's achievement."

Lindbergh helped boost the air-mail service by leading a squadron of mail planes from St. Louis to Chicago, changing planes several times en route. The amount of mail carried by the planes broke all records. The column then flew to Detroit, where it was reported that he and Major Lauchlin, flight commander at Selfridge field, might become connected with a new air transportation project between New York and Chicago, with Itasca, Buffalo and Detroit as terminals. The rumor was not verified.

MUSKOLIN's new electoral law was approved by the Italian council of ministers. It abolishes the party system, disestablishes the democratic basis of law making and reduces the chamber of deputies to a consultative body of experts without political functions. The law will become operative as soon as it is ratified by the present chamber.

FOLLOWING the action of the house before the holidays, the senate has passed the alien property bill. Provision is made for the return of the alien property seized in war time, for the payment of compensation for German ships, patents, and a radio station, and for the financing of the payment of awards of the seized claims commission to American citizens.

RECOGNIZING as permissible "some discrimination intended to encourage agriculture," the Supreme court of the United States has upheld the Kentucky cooperative marketing statistics which have been the model for similar legislation in 42 states and which were attacked as unconstitutional because of being class legislation.

REPRESENTATIVE W. H. GREEN of Iowa was appointed by President Coolidge as judge of the Court of Claims, and is succeeded as chairman of the house ways and means committee by Representative Hawley of Oregon. This is likely to have an important bearing on tax legislation, for while Mr. Green has supported the administration in most matters he has differed with Secretary Mellon on a number of issues, notably the repeal of the estate tax.

Holy City of the Shias

The Wall and Roofs of Nejd.

(Prepared by the National Geographic Society, Washington, D. C.)

NEJD, a desert city west of the Euphrates in Iraq, is a sort of secondary Mecca in the Mohammedan world. It is the annual pilgrimage place for the Shias, the "dissenters" of Islam, just as Mecca is a goal of pilgrims among the orthodox Mohammedans.

It is five days by mule or camel caravan from Baghdad to Nejd, and in the eventful centuries since the Shias founded Nejd—on the spot where a nephew of the Prophet Mohammed was slain—it is estimated that over 25,000,000 Moslems have made the pilgrimage to this mysterious desert city of golden domes, fabulous treasures, and weird rites.

Thousands of devotees from the Shias horde of India, Persia and Turkestan flock through Baghdad each year, bringing with them their mummified dead—salted and dried—for burial in the holy ground about the mystic city. By camel caravan and winding mule train the patient pilgrims make the long march; many from distant Turkestan are a whole year making the round trip. To help handle the throng that pours through Baghdad each spring and autumn, enterprising Baghdad Jews have established an "Arabanaah," or stage line, from Baghdad to Kerbela, the half-way town on the desert route to Nejd. From Kerbela on the way leads through the desert and monotonous desert—a rolling sea of gray sand, the margin of the great wastes that sweep Arabia from Kerbela and Nejd to Mecca, Aden, and the Red sea.

As one approaches Nejd he sees first the great gold dome of its mosque, burning in the sun rays; then, the high, frowning walls that surround the sacred city. It is a gorgeous spectacle, miragelike vision, as of a mighty city floating in the air. The high, sharp walls shut it off abruptly from the desert, and it seems a mighty thing apart from the surrounding sea of sand.

Nejd is a freak city. Not a green thing—a plant, shrub, or tree—lives within its dry, hot limits. It is built on a high plain of soft sandstone. The narrow, crooked streets, in many places mere passages three or four feet wide, wind about like jungle paths. In the Arab quarter the mud-plastered houses are all two stories high and, odd as it sounds, have no windows facing the street. Only a wooden door, unvarnished and bolted, but so low that one must stoop to enter, opens to the street.

Cellars Are Refuges From the Heat.

One of the strange features of this strange city is its cellars. In summer the fierce heat drives the panting people deep down into the earth, like rats in a hole. Beneath every house is a cellar, burrowed unthinkingly to amazing depths; one, it is said, reaches an astonishingly low level, being more than 100 feet below the street. Down into these damp, dark holes the Shias flee when the scorching desert air stifles above and imported German thermometers stand at 150 degrees Fahrenheit. Some of the cellars (kerbabs) are arranged in a tier of cells or rooms, one below the other; the upper room is used in the first hot months, the family going lower down as the heat increases.

So many of these vast underground retreats have been dug that the excavated material, carried from the city on donkeys' backs and dumped on the desert outside, forms a great hill over 100 feet high, from the top of which a fine view of the city may be had. It is said that many of these cellars are connected by means of underground corridors, and that criminals, who swarm in Nejd, easily elude capture by passing through these tunnels from house to house, finally emerging at a point in the city remote from their place of disappearance.

In the heart of Nejd, its great dome visible for miles on the surrounding desert, stands the magnificent mosque of Abbas, the shrine that draws the teeming throng from all the Middle East.

Turning from the native quarter, the visitor comes to the long straight bazaar leading to the mosque. He is struck with the difference in the looks of the Nejd people and the crowds at Kerbela. Many unclean, swarthy desert men are among them, their long hair, faded dress, and camel sticks, or overalls of guns and saddles, marking them as from the wild places. There is a spirit of crude, barbaric primitiveness in the crowd that swarms past. The little touches of outside influence one sees at Baghdad, like an occasional European hat or an imported overcoat, are all lacking at Nejd. Here is old Arabia in original bindings.

Beauties of the Mosque.

The mosque is come upon suddenly, for the crowded bazaar street ends in an open plaza before this dazzling structure.

In amazement one gazes on its wonderful facade; golden tiles and fancy silver work rise above and about the great portal, and across the wide entrance is hung a chain of brass, worn smooth and shiny from contact with the millions of turbans, tarbooshes, and keffiyehs which have brushed under it in centuries gone by. This chain is so hung that all who enter the mosque must bow.

Through this open gate can be seen the base of the great mosque itself. The great gold tiles which cover the dome also run to the very base of the mosque. And on the inside of the walls about the court are more gold tiles. Above the outer portal, too, on the outside, are sprawling Arabic characters 20 inches high, seemingly cut from sheets of gold. What must this barbaric splendor have cost!

The cost of the wonderful temple itself is but a bagatelle compared with the value of the treasure in its vault. For ages, be it known, Indian princes, shahs, and nobles of the Shia faith have made precious gifts to this temple at Nejd, pouring into it a priceless stream of jewels, gold, and plate. The looting of the Nejd mosque has been a favorite dream of soldiers in the Middle East. The true enormity of the treasure at Nejd was only brought to light less than a generation ago when the shah of Persia made the hajj and the pent-up wealth was revealed to his royal gaze by its zealous official keeper, the "Kilidar."

But no Christian has ever seen the inner glories of the great mosque of Abbas at Nejd. The contrast between two faiths is striking; a Moslem walking into a Christian church is made welcome; a Christian who walked into the Moslem mosque at Nejd would be slain as a defiler; yet both claim the same God!

More human bodies are buried in the plain outside the walls of Nejd. It is said, than in any other spot on earth. Myriads of fancy tombs, terminating at the top in little blue-tiled domes, rise from the plain. And all the millions of pilgrims who have come in ages past with corpses for burial have also brought money to spend. The richer the man who brings the body, the greater the toll taken.

Burial There is Costly.

Burial sites within view of the great mosque bring a high price. Tax is laid on every corpse imported from India, Persia, etc. Many bodies are smuggled in. It is told of one astute Persian pilgrim that he divided his grandfather's skeleton and sent it in separate parcels by mail to save freight and tax.

When a death caravan reaches the outskirts of Nejd, they unpack their gawdies baggage and prepare the various bodies for burial. The crude methods of embalming or mummifying would expose Nejd to disease were it not for the dry desert air. The very few folk of Nejd who work for a living make money manufacturing fancy shrouds, stamped with Koranic sentiments, for the burial of corpses brought in by the pilgrims.

Others turn out prayer bricks ("foras"), which every Shia uses in his daily prayers. These are made from holy clay, scooped up from the great cemetery and pressed into tiny odd-shaped bricks, and also stamped with an inscription from the Koran. When a Shia prays, he lays this torba on the ground, faces Nejd, and prostrates himself, touching his forehead against the sacred brick.

In all of this unnatural city one sees not a tree or shrub; not even a potted plant. It is a dry, prisonlike place of somber gray stones and mud-plastered walls. Remove its mosque, its one priceless possession, and Nejd, with its horde who live on thyme that come to pray, would perish from the earth. In the 1,500 years of its eventful life, not one useful article has been manufactured within its fanatical precincts.

Yet in all Islam, Shias turn to Nejd to say their prayers. To Nejd every good man must make the pilgrimage once in his life, and at Nejd he hopes to be buried when he dies.

One second she stood irresolute, doubting her own courage to open the door. But memory of Rand's dearest nerved her. Gripping her pistol with tense and nerveless fingers, she stepped out into the night. She did not unconsciously press the trigger, she opened the door. A heavy black curtain hung in thick folds before it. She felt for the corner, and then, breathlessly, drew it back. Only deep blackness beyond. Following the wall on her left, she stepped, slid rather, behind the thick curtain, and guided by the touch of her fingers on the wall, moved forward slowly, breath by breath. Another heavy curtain. Exploringly she felt and fingered it, hesitating a moment to quiet her panting fears.

Suddenly there was a sound, a voice, behind the curtain right at her hand. "Let's have a look."

Gay had barely time to flatten herself against the wall, white face lowered into her dark collar, when the curtain at the other end moved and parted. No light emanated from behind it, but Gay felt that two men came out, carefully pausing to replace the heavy folds behind them, and crossed to the curtained door through which she had entered.

One drew back the black folds of curtain, and pushed the door wide. "No sign of them." The voice was Ronald Ingram's. "They are late."

"He'll give you the devil for taking that fellow on board," said the other voice, one strange to Gay.

"There's nothing else to do with him," Ronald defended quickly. "I'm d-d if I'll crink him. Garman knows I won't. I told him when I signed on."

"If you let him get away—" "I can't let him get away! I don't dare. He had been spying on us—God knows how long. Knows everything we're up to, of course. He'd have them after us in no time. No, we'll take him along. Garman can do as he likes. He attacks at nothing, God knows. But they're nothing on me so far. Look, there's the light, they're coming."

The men went back carefully through the heavy curtain, drawing the folds of it behind them. The blackness was like pitch. A prisoner—n-ey—who knew everything! They were taking him to Garman who stuck at nothing. Dear Rand! All Gay's fears fell from her, dead courage lay cold upon her hands. Her thoughts were quiet and content.

"A boat is coming for them. They have taken him prisoner. Perhaps I will have a chance to rescue him—with my pistol."

Brushlessly she slipped to the edge of the curtain, drew it back. Still blackness within. Her fingers guided her. There was a door now, on the right side, open but thickly veiled. Her fingers touched it. Yes, a light. They were in that room. Hand was in that room, a prisoner.

She wedged her face up to the curtain where but the slightest fraction of one eye touched the aperture her fingers formed in the folds of cloth. A dozen men in the room, all dressed for cold weather, out-of-doors, heavy coats, heavy hats, gloves in their hands. They were not smoking. There was no fire in the room, but one pale lantern giving light. She saw Ronald Ingram. He was dressed as the others were, with a revolver in his hand others had revolvers, too. The Chinese man was there. And there was one other, hands bound behind the low chair on which he sat, his mouth tightly gagged. He too was dressed for the sea, warily, but he sat hunched down, dejected, cowering.

"Oh, my dear," Gay thought tenderly. Tears came to her eyes. She could not see the face, she had no need. Every line of Rand's face was clear to her heart.

Ronald Ingram looked at his watch. "Be ready now," he said, in a low voice. "Go one at a time. Follow me. Sen. Walk slowly, feel your way. We can't show a light. Don't talk. You cannot smoke until we are well out to sea. Hodge, you take the prisoner with you, and go first after Hodge. The rest fall in after Hodge. I'll bring up the rear. Not a sound when we go out." Then he crossed swiftly to the dejected figure of the prisoner. "Now mind what I told you," he said. His voice was low, in- sistent. "If you make the slightest sound, the least effort to get away—" He turned his revolver in his hands suggestively—"that for your pistol! You know this place, you know this cage—you haven't a chance in the world to escape. Be ready now, fellows."

The men stood up, drew on their gloves. Gay slipped away from the curtain, back to the second one, behind it.

"A boat is coming—they are taking Rand with them—they are all armed, and he is bound." How her thoughts raced!

Outside in the night again, she stood flat against the wall and waited. It was in her heart to touch Rand as he passed, to draw him out of the line as they walked, perhaps escaping notice in the darkness. Motionless she waited, cool, alert, holding her breath.

There was sudden sound on the shore of the cove, the low plash of oars, a low whistle, the scraping and grinding of a boat on the sand, and again the low whistle.

Then, without a sound from within, the curtain at her hand was drawn aside. The little Chinaman came out and padded softly down toward the shore, his head lowered, looking neither to right nor left. After him came the tall man, Hodge of course, a revolver in one hand, the other thrust through the bound one of the prisoner. Gay's fingers ached about her pistol, but she knew any use of it at that moment would mean only death to Rand, and to herself as well. Perhaps later she might have a chance—he was a strong swimmer—if she could only manage to release the bonds that held him.

Still from behind the curtain came the silent, closely cloaked figure, one after another, silently, and at last no more. But there was a sound within, the drawing of curtains, the click of a latch, the slide of a wooden frame. Gay did not hesitate. Stumbling a little, she moved out swiftly into the line of silently marching men. Blindly, automatically, unhesitatingly, she followed them, but in her blindness she fell full length on the rocky path. Ronald Ingram came upon her from behind. She felt the touch of his boot at her shoulder.

"Get up, d-d it, and be careful!" His voice was low, less than a whisper.

Gay scrambled to her feet, and hurried after the others. A hand was held out from the boat to assist her, and she was swung up in her turn, with Ronald Ingram behind her, the last man on.

"O. K?" breathed a voice from the boat.

"Yeh. Let's go."

The boat bont crunched on the sand again, swept into the water. The oars dipped the waves. A fine exaltation came over Gay. She was daring death with Rand. If she could not continue to save him, then she, who had selfishly refused to share his life, would gloriously share his death.

The boat headed swiftly out to sea, and the fine salt spray touched her face.

CHAPTER XII

No one questioned Gay's presence in the boat, no one so much as looked her way, or offered her a word. She dropped upon the bench, cowering, just where she was pushed in the pushing crowd. Shyly at first she kept her face lowered into her collar, but later, gaining courage, she dared to look about in search of Rand.

Her eyes found him at last where he sat, huddled between two others on the opposite side, and there was no opportunity for her to draw nearer to him at that moment.

The three men, Ingram and Hodge, with the one in charge of the boat, stood together and talked. Gay was beside them, but their voices were so low that she could catch only scattered words of what they said, and none but Ingram's, whose voice was familiar.

"Hanging around spying—No, d-d it, business is one thing, but murder is murder. Do as you like, but I can't have a hand in it. Remember Blakey. Nothing on me but smuggling and coast running. Few years at most. I've got twice salted away, too, believe me."

"Remember Blakey." Was it Blakey who had come to her in the cove, with the bullet wound in his brow? Not Ingram, then, who caused that gashing wound, but another, Garman, to whom they were taking Rand. Gay's fingers fondled her pistol, tentatively, but well she realized that any such action would be worse than folly, for these were desperate men, and they were armed. Ingram might attack at murder in cold blood, but self-defense would put a different color on his scruples. If she could only get to Rand, ally her pistol into his hands, release his bonds. Still there was no opportunity, and she could think of no subtle expedient to contrive her ends.

She would have liked to fling herself across the intervening space and put both arms tenderly about those drooping shoulders.

"If I dared, I would. How surprised they would be. 'Rand, I'd say, 'kiss me.' I dare say they would all drop dead of astonishment." Her teeth chattered nervously, her knees trembled, cold little smiles wrinkled her lips. "I am going to laugh," she thought. "I know I am simply going to scream with laughter. How absurd this is. Going to sea with a band of murderers—ridiculous. People don't do such things. Such things don't happen. I must be losing my mind, I dare say I am crazy, as they think on the island." A low dry chuckle gurgled through her cold lips. The man at her side turned.

"Cold," he muttered. "They don't put themselves out much to give service, eh?"

Gay's reply was an indistinguishable murmur, but she guarded her thoughts more closely.

The men smoked thirstily. She felt they were not fellows of a common hand, but separate, each for himself, except Ronald Ingram, Hodge and the little Chinaman, and the men who manned this boat. The others held aloof, nor did Ingram show any spirit of camaraderie to one of them. It was some sinister personal business that brought these men together.

Suddenly, in the darkness ahead, the lights of a ship showed up, lights green, and red, and pale.

Gay fingered her pistol nervously, tempted to fire desperately for help, taking the chance that help would come. Watching warily she waited a moment. The boat seemed to be heading direct for the ship, not avoiding it; yes, they were making for it. That ship, then, was Garman's, where they were taking Rand. There was no signalling between the two that she could see, but the great majestic monster of the sea slowed, came to a stop, and the small boat pulled alongside.

Ronald Ingram nodded toward the prisoner. "Bring him, Hodge," he called, and then ran quickly up the ladder first of all.

Hodge and the Chinaman prodded Rand up and shoved him to the ladder, which he climbed nimbly enough, though he must have been stiff with the cold and the exposure, as were they all. Gay's first impulse was to crowd forward, to go up the ladder after him, but remembering to time that a nearer view of her person might disclose a lack of manliness in spite of her boots and knickerbockers, she hung modestly back. One after another they hurried up, and the Chinaman indicated her forward.

Already the ship was heading east, as the men stumbled forward into the corridor and up the stairs into the warm bright smoking room. Gay slipped into a corner in the shadow of the door and crouched there, watchful, catlike.

Hodge came in with the prisoner, shoved him unceremoniously into a seat on the opposite side of the door, beyond Gay's sight, and went quickly out again.

She slid forward in her seat and peered around the projection of the door to the opposite corner where Rand sat alone, dejected and sullen.

"Come On In, Ingram—Cold as the Devil."

His eyes swam dizzily, her head reeled. Garman—who didn't stick at murder—poor Blakey—

Instinctively, half realizing what she was about, she started to shudder out feet first, from beneath the bunk. But she was stayed by sudden noises, steps and voices in the corridor.

"Bring us coffee, Bart—Come on In, Ingram—Cold as the devil."

"The voice was deep, assured, with a pleasant quality to its depth. Two men, Ronald Ingram and the captain, stepped quickly into the room, pulled off their gloves and wraps, drew chairs up to the desk, their backs to the bunk.

Gay, crouching there in her stuffy woolen garments, watched them furtively, one eye riveted to the captain between the trunk and the great boot. A large figure, broad, not tall, with a massive head, and dark soft hair in great abundance. The face was like the face of a saint, mild and spiritual, very dark. The lashes of the eyes were dark and silken, the eyes both mild and kind. Gay's fears stilled a little at sight of his benevolent face.

He hushed himself with the papers until the boy came with coffee, which both men accepted in silence. As soon as he had gone, the captain took up the business in hand: "Papers all right?"

"Fine. Best set he ever turned out. Perfect."

No Appeal Possible From Birds' Judgment

Most people have seen large numbers of birds gathered together in a field or on a hill. But how many know they were probably holding a court-martial on one of their fellows?

These bird courts are held periodically, chiefly by crows, ravens, or sparrows. The prisoner is brought into the court and a general crowing ensues until judgment is delivered.

Should the unfortunate bird be found guilty, it is set on by the rest and pecked to death. Stealing sticks from another bird's nest is, apparently, a crime that does not call for such drastic punishment. Six or so of the other birds simply proceed to break up the offender's own nest!

Should an offender to the sparrows?

Old Flower Favorites

Some of the old-fashioned flowers are: Larkspur, iris, hollyhock, phlox, peony, columbine, spirea, poppy, evening primrose, rocket, lupine, fox glove, anemone, bluebell, plink, magnolia, bleeding heart, veronica, candy-tuft, tiger lily and lily-of-the-valley.

Self-confidence is the first requisite to great undertakings.

his chin far down in the woolen collar of his coat.

During the bright lights, she got up and crossed the room quickly, slipping into the seat beside him, her arm lying against his.

At the unexpected touch and pressure, he threw himself back in his seat suddenly and looked at her. For the first time she saw his face. She never knew how she repressed the cry of horror that rose instinctively to her lips at the sight of him. She had never seen him before. The face was sly, vicious, hard, the most evil face of all she had seen that night.

It was not Rand. She was alone at sea with the murderous band.

Her flesh crawled upon her quivering nerves as she shrank back. She was sure he could not fail to hear the great pounding of her heart in her throat, the sob on her lips.

Rand, Rand!—The name bent in her ears, throbbed in her pulses. Sheer terror, panic seized her. She grew frantic in terror and despair. She edged away from him, farther, farther, until she reached the door, where she peered out into the dim corridor. Now and then sounded the whir of bells from below; the spit of steam and the pound of the engines increased.

The corridor was empty, dimly lighted. Gay edged outside the door and stood a moment uncertainly. Doors down the corridor, to the right and the left. One stood open—a cabin—there were chairs, a desk, bright lights. If only she could gain access to some passenger, some traveler, she thought she could not fail to gain protection. Gay slid slowly along the wall until she was beyond sight of those in the smoking room. Then, with a desperate flying leap, she gained the open door, the shelter of the cabin. It was empty of occupant.

Steps sounded on the stairs leading up to the smoking room, a voice called orders.

Gay flashed a frightened glance about the room. Beneath a shelf of books along the wall of the cabin a wide bunk was made up, the blankets turned back. Beneath the bunk showed a foot locker. But the bunk was wide, and Gay was not large. With movements quick as thought it self, she squirmed under the bunk at the foot, behind the locker, and wriggled up until she was out of sight from the room. In the silence she moved up a little, so that she could stare out from behind the shadow of the foot locker.

The cabin was unusually large, with a bath adjoining. The desk was covered with books, papers, writing equipment. There was a typewriter. On the walls were files of papers, more books, professional instruments, and on a row of hooks were coats, caps, uniforms—men's things. Gay's heart sank. It was a man's room, a seaman's room. There was gold braid on the cuff of the coats on the walls, four stripes.

"Oh, dear heaven," gasped Gay. "It is Garman's cabin!"

Her eyes swam dizzily, her head reeled. Garman—who didn't stick at murder—poor Blakey—

Instinctively, half realizing what she was about, she started to shudder out feet first, from beneath the bunk. But she was stayed by sudden noises, steps and voices in the corridor.

MAKING THE FARM TRACTOR EARN ITS "KEEP" IN WINTER

In Winter While the Horse is Standing in His Stall,
This Modern Tractor is Kept at Work.

The tractor costs considerably less to keep than the horse during the winter period of comparative inactivity, but even during that period it can be put to a fairly active routine of work that will more than pay for its "keep."

On most farms there is wood to be hauled, snow to be stacked and, of course, the tractor in this case can do the work of several teams and many men—and do it in the face of such difficulties as snow and ice.

But more and more the progressive farmer is finding other important work which his light tractor can perform in the winter time and thus make use of much of the time which used to go to waste on the average farm.

The Agricultural Department of the State College of Pennsylvania is now conducting a series of experiments which are developing new uses for tractors on the farm and thus making investigations to increase the use of tractors in various seasons of the country are employing

NAIMEY'S

The BABY

No mother in this enlightened age would give her baby something she did not know was perfectly harmless, especially when a few drops of plain Castoria will right a baby's stomach and end almost any little ill. Fretfulness and fever, too; it seems no time until everything is serene.

That's the beauty of Castoria; its gentle influence seems just what is needed. It does all that castor oil might accomplish, without shock to the system. Without the evil taste. It's delicious! Being purely vegetable, you can give it as often as there's a sign of colic, constipation, diarrhea, or need to aid sound, natural sleep.

Just one warning: It is genuine Fletcher's Castoria that physicians recommend. Other preparations may be just as free from all doubtful drugs, but no child of this writer's is going to test them! Besides, the book on care and feeding of babies that comes with Fletcher's Castoria is worth its weight in gold.

Got Hornsby Through Joke

THE Boston baseball world was recently inclined to the belief that there is a Santa Claus. While various explanations and rumors to the Hub to explain the deal which brings Rogers Hornsby to the New York Giants' explanation of the deal stand for itself.

Officially, from Braves headquarters, Boston "has been after Hornsby" for some time and gave up two promising as well as youthful players, both of whom are wanted by the Giants, to further that end. Unofficially, the deal was something of an accident, growing out of Boston attempts to obtain the services of a different New York player.

According to the unofficial version, President Emil Fuchs of the Braves met Manager John McGraw of the Giants on a dicker for another Giant infielder. The deal fell through, but at a later conference, McGraw intimated that he would like Francis Hornsby, the young Braves catcher and Jimmy Welsh for his outfield. If the Braves president really had any trading in mind. More in amusement than in earnest, Judge Fuchs replied that "It would take Hornsby himself to get these two." When McGraw gave serious thought to the statement instead of an answering snarl, the Braves chief executive got down to business and the deal went through as much to his own surprise as that of the in baseball world.

And the only additional comment forthcoming from the Braves president regarding the deal was a statement to the effect that Hornsby and Welsh were valued at $150,000, and worth a lot to the Giants.

"That's their value to me and the Braves," he said, "and any statement such as one I have heard that Rogers Hornsby, a $200,000 player, was traded for $25,000 worth of material is absurd."

Here We Have Rogers Hornsby.

Pineapple to Furnish Future Paper Supply?

Caron, a species of wild pineapple found in Brazil, may soon be used to provide pulp for making first-class paper.

For centuries the natives of Brazil have cut the long narrow leaves that protect the caron fruit, and obtained fiber from them by beating the leaves between two stones. From this they make twine and ropes by "wet rotting."

In the experiments the pulp was obtained from this native rope, which was cut into short lengths, threshed, cooked in a solution of caustic soda, bleached, and beaten. The caron fibers are cylindrical and comparatively long, but of small diameter, properties that enable them to mat together easily, giving compactness and strength to the sheet.

Gum, oil, balsam, pitch and acid, are also obtained from this pineapple.

The Overactor

Louis Marshall, the New York lawyer who represents the theater ticket agencies, was criticizing a young actor.

"This young fellow," he said, "over-acts. I'd like to tell him the anecdote about Doctor Johnson. It would do him good."

"Doctor Johnson was finding fault one day with the acting of his friend, David Garrick. In the ghost scene of 'Hamlet.' He ridiculed Garrick's over-acting, and when he finished Boswell said:

"But that famous start! Wouldn't you, sir, start just as Mr. Garrick does, if you saw a ghost?"

"I hope not," said Johnson. "If I did, I should frighten the ghost."

New Platinum Supply

The London colonial office announces that a platinum-bearing area of about forty square miles in extent has been discovered in Sierra Leone, West Africa, because the deposits, which are alluvial, are "likely to be of considerable importance."

Platinum is the most valuable of all metals. The present price is about $70 an ounce.

An interesting point in connection with the new discovery is that at present the world depends on Soviet Russia for more than half of its platinum supplies.

LUCKY STRIKE CIGARETTES

Lucky Strikes are the Favorite Brand of Paul Whiteman—

"It was but recently, when I started to act as master of ceremonies with my band at the Paramount Theatre, that I realized how vital perfect voice condition was to a performer. I have always been a consistent smoker and fortunately, Lucky Strikes were my favorite brand. I like their toasted flavor and, best of all, I can smoke as often as I like, without fear of irritating my voice, which is becoming a great asset in my work."

Medicine Stops
Stubborn Coughs

Here is a real medicine long the standard of doctors for coughs and colds. You can count on it to stop the toughest of old die-hard coughs. It's used in the most persistent cases when coughs must be stopped and stopped quick.

First it breaks up the phlegm, soothes the inflamed membrane and gives the throat muscles a chance to expel the phlegm. That stops your racking cough, and like a healing poultice it takes the soreness out of the delicate throat lining.

Other elements not found in ordinary sweet sugary syrups go into the system through the blood and attack the germs right at the seat of trouble and in a day or two every trace of danger is gone.

Adams' Balsam contains no dope, dangerous drugs or chloroform. It's wonderful for children. It certainly stops coughs—Easy ones in a dose or two—Hard ones in a day or two. Two doses, 30c and 75c.

CHURCH ACTIVITIES

UNIVERSALIST CHURCH
Sunday School will be held at 9:30 A. M.

METHODIST CHURCH
Our Sunday school meets at 9:15 A. M.

Preaching service, 10:45.
We now come to the letter, "L" in our series. You will be convinced that this is a home-like subject.

There are so many L's in the alphabet that it is hard for us to limit ourselves to those most profitable for our consideration.

But in looking them over, and listening to their inner tone we have tried to choose those giving us the greatest measure of light and life, together with the least loss of all that is implied in the word life.

Epworth League Sunday evening 8:30. Topic, "Beginning An Experiment." Leader, Esther Lopham.

This is the beginning of a series, entitled "Adventures in Christian Living."

Our Sunday evening, 7:30 service will be one of interest to all, the annual opening of the Missionary Bible boxes. This service will begin with our usual songs of praise, following which will be an interesting program.

Class meeting Tuesday evening, 7:30 also meeting of the official board.

CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH
L. A. Edwards, Pastor.

10:45. Morning worship. The subject of the pastor's sermon will be, "The Enthusiasm of Jesus." This being the fifth of the series on the Human Qualities of Jesus.

The writers of the New Testament studiously avoided the use of the word that we so freely use today, enthusiasm, for we find that it was intimately related to madness, insanity.

We speak of ardency, earnestness, fervor; but we are just a little afraid of enthusiasm as applied to religion, even yet. But if we read the Gospels aright we shall find this quality much in evidence; indeed, it has been the motive power behind every great Christian achievement.

The pulpit Primer of yesterday were not afraid of piety "Fire." But the advice recently given to a minister might well be accepted by many preachers. "Put more fire into your sermons, or more sermons into your fire."

The Church school meets at 12 o'clock.

Comrades of the Way meets at 7 o'clock. Leader, James Alger.

The first rehearsal for the Easter Cantata will be held at 8 o'clock on Sunday evening.

If you find our services pleasant and helpful, tell your friends about them; perhaps they too would enjoy them.

Please help us to make this just a real friendly, helpful church.
